DETAILED ACTION

1. Claims 8-12 and 14 are pending in this application and have been examined.

Response to Arguments

2. Applicant's arguments with respect to claims 8-12 have been considered but are moot in view of the new ground(s) of rejection.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

3. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

4. Claims 8-11 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Shostak, 5,694,608, and Pisello et al., US 5,495,607.

As for claims 8 and 11, Shostak teaches a method of controlling use of a content object that includes text (abstract), the method including; receiving data representing the object at a user device (fig. 2 element 260: User Interface, col. 8 lines 49-51, col. 9 lines 5-10); receiving at the user device an initial set of data representing usage rights associated with said object (col. 15 lines 55-67); the initial set of data defining a first set of rights that are permitted and a second set of rights that are not permitted (col. 15 lines 55-67); and upon receiving a request to perform a function using said content, checking said initial set of data representing usage rights to determine whether said function should be allowed (col. 15, lines 55-67). Shostak does not teach that a drag and drop function is among those that are not permitted. However Pisello teaches a step wherein the ability to utilize a drag-and-drop operation is dependent on evaluation of permission data associated with the content data (col. 18 lines 47-63). Therefore it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to incorporate these features into the method of Shostak. It would be desirable to do so since this would allow greater system control over end user content transfer. Motive to make this combination is found in Shostak, col. 2 lines 25-39 where the need for an efficient file database user interface is discussed.

As for claims 9 and 10, the combination of Shostak and Pisello does not teach that either a modify, a printing, or a saving function are among those that are not permitted. Yet Official Notice may be taken that such limitations on usage rights are old and well known in the art. Therefore it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time of the invention to incorporate these features into the combination of Shostak and Pisello. It would have been desirable to do so as this would allow greater control over the end-user's ability to alter or distribute the digital work.

5. Claim 12 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Shostak as applied to claim 8 above, and Earnest, US 4,888,798

As for claim 12, Earnest teaches the features of the claim that Shostak fails to, namely, engaging with a remote server to obtain revised data representing usage rights (col. 3 lines 10-15). Therefore it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time of the invention to incorporate this feature into the method of Shostak. It would be desirable to do so since this would allow a user to undertake a file transfer in situations where a permissions database does not permit such a function immediately as in Shostak.

Allowable Subject Matter

5. Claim 14 is allowed.

6. The following is a statement of reasons for the indication of allowable subject matter: The closest prior art in the field does not teach the combination of features set forth in claim 14, particularly including the steps of: when there is a blocked e-mail transmission, querying a remote server to determine criteria for transmission, and if the criteria is met, receiving an updated set of data defining a second set of rights that are permitted, the second set of rights including transmission rights.
